

THE FACTORY CHILD.

'Twas on a winter's morning, the weather dark and wild,
Three hours before the dawning, when the father rous'd his child;
Her daily morsel bringing, the darksome room he pac'd,
And cried, "The bell is ringing, my hapless darling haste."
"Father, I'm up, but weary! I scarce can reach the door;
Long is the way and dreary, oh carry me once more;
To help us we've no mother, and you have no employ,
They've kill'd my little brother — we dearly lov'd that boy!"
Her wasted form seem'd nothing, the load was at her heart;
The father he kept soothing her; at the mill gate they part;
The overseer then met her as to her frame she crept,
And with the thong he beat her, and cursed her 'cause she wept.
Alas! what hours of horror made up her infant day,
In pain, and cold, and sorrow, they slowly pass'd away;
It seem'd as she grew weaker, the thread the oftener broke,
The rapid wheels ran quicker, and heavier fell the stroke.
The sun had long descended, but night brought no repose,
Her day began and ended just as her tyrants chose;
At length, to a little neighbour her halfpenny she paid
To take her last hour's labour while by her frame she laid.
At last, the engine ceasing, the captives homeward rush'd;
She thought her strength increasing — 'twas hope her spirit flush'd.
She left, but oft she tarried, then fell to rise no more,
Till by her comrades carried, she reach'd her father's door.
All night, with tortured feelings, he watch'd his precious child,
While close beside her kneeling, she knew him not nor smil'd.
Again the night-bell ringing — her last perception tried,
When from her straw bed springing, " 'Tis time!" she shriek'd — and died.

THE DYING GIRL.

BY JOHN BOLTON ROGERSON.

And thou art dying, beautiful and young,
When smiles of joy should on thy lips be playing,
And thou shouldst bound with sportive glee along,
Where merry maids are in the meadows maying.
The spring sun shineth through thy window-pane,
The pleasant breeze with balmy breath is sighing,
And thou canst hear the feather'd minstrel's strain
In that still room where thou art pale and dying.
Why is thy spirit summon'd to the skies,
Untried by years, unvisited by sorrow?
Why art thou call'd, ere yet thy gentle eyes
Have fear'd to look upon the coming morrow?
Thy cheek hath never paled with anxious care,
Thy heart hath never throb'd with guilty sadness;
Even as thyself thy course was pure and fair,
Hallow'd by love, and cheer'd with looks of gladness.
Why didst thou leave thine own immortal heaven,
For earthly guests to cherish and caress thee?
Why unto us wert thou, sweet spirit, given,
And call'd away when we had learn'd to bless thee?
Why wert thou fashion'd lovely to the sight?
Why were thine eyes with tender radiance streaming?
Why didst thou come, young being of delight,
To fade like mirage on the pilgrim gleaming?
Selfish and weak! — why should we wish thee here?
Pass to thy home, unspotted, happy spirit;
Hasten on blissful wing to that glad sphere,
Where thou wilt glory evermore inherit.
Mingle and dwell among the angel-band,
But, oh! whilst stars beneath thy path are burning,
Think thou at times upon our sinful land,
And plead for those whose gaze is upwards turning.

THE MOTHERLESS.

The following is one of the most touchingly beautiful things we ever read. No one can doubt that this is the language of a husband and a father with a spirit stricken by the loss of one fondly loved as a wife, and as the mother of his precious ones:

You're weary, precious ones! your eyes
Are wandering far and wide;
Think ye of her who knew so well
Your tender thoughts to guide;
Who could to wisdom's sacred lore
Your fixed attention claim!
Ah! never from your hearts erase
That blessed mother's name.

'Tis time to say your evening hymn,
My youngest infant dove!
Come press thy velvet cheek to mine,
And rend the lay of love;
My sheltering arms can clasp you all,
My poor deserted throng!
Cling as you used to cling to her
Who sings the angel song.

Begin, sweet birds! the accustomed strain,
Come warble loud and clear;
Alas! alas! you're weeping all,
You're sobbing in my ear.
Good night! — Go say the prayers she taught
Beside your little bed —
The lips that used to bless you there
Are silent with the dead!

A father's hand your course may guide,
Amid the thorns of life;
His care protect those shrinking plants
That dread the storm of strife;
But who upon your infant hearts
Shall like that mother write!
Who touc hed the strings that rule the soul!
Dear smitten flock, Good night.

THE MOTHER'S PET.

How happily the little child
Enjoys the summer air;
How cheerily, with accents mild,
She greets her cousin fair!

How sweet to see the mother fair
Bend o'er that cherub form,
And mingle, with a parent's care,
Words of affection warm!

Right merrily the little ones
Will sport this sunny morn;
But mother's eye, where Clara runs,
Still anxiously is borne.

Should Clara fall, mother will fly,
To raise her from the floor:
When Clara cries, mother's dark eye
Beams with delight no more.

So, o'er my path through this vain world,
May guardian hosts keep ward;
And, when life's fleeting flag is furled,
My flight to Heaven guard.

PRIMROSE.—DOUBLE WHITE.

— EARLY YOUTH. —

FLOWERS never lose their charm. When older grown,
See a child working in his little plot
Of garden ground; and, if you chance to stand,
As often I have done, high in the love
Of the young tyro of the spade and rake,
Look at the eager joyousness and pride
With which the choicest of the little store
Are plucked and offered you.

TO LUCY DURING HER ABSENCE.

BY AMELIA.

The dew is on the blossoms, and the young moon
on the sea.
It is the twilight hour—the hour for you and me—
The time when memory wanders across life's dreamy track,
When the past floats up before us, and the lost
come stealing back;
And while along the still shore my lonely footsteps rove,
With the deep blue far beneath me, and the pale blue up above,
And with their trembling footsteps the faint stars
tread the sea,
I think upon you, Lucy—do you ever think of me?
Oh Lucy! in this sweet hour, when the stars and waves have met,
And the full heart most remembers all it wishes
to forget,
When the deep hush of the twilight seems such a holy time,
That to smile were almost sinful, and to whisper
were a crime,
'Tis sweet along those dim paths with lonely steps to glide,
For the moon is in the far blue, and the breeze is at my side;
But yet my heart is heavy, and my voice hath lost
its glee,
I am sighing for you, Lucy—do you ever sigh for me?

Dear Lucy! in your absence, where'er your wanderings tend,
You must keep within your pure heart a sweet thought for your friend,
Till you sit once more in beauty within your father's hall,
With a soft smile on your young lip, and a pleasant word for all.
Alas! the breeze is balmy, and the hushed wave
deeply blue,
And flowers are in my pathway, but no light-hearted Lu!
Oh the summer months without you such a lonely time will be!
I am sighing for you, Lucy—do you ever sigh for me?

AIR—⁴ Sparkling and Bright,
Lonely and still was the verdant hill
And the waves below yet slumbered,
The breezes light as a summer night
All the dewy hours numbered:
The Sentry's tramp from the foeman's camp
With his tone of hasty warning,
Came low and clear to the yeoman's ear
As he watched the early dawning.

The heroes thought as they bravely wrought,
Their country's altar rearing,
Of a noble land by Valor's hand
Made free and home-endearing:
In firm array, when broke the day,
The deadly charge they waited,
And side by side in silent pride,
With skill their prowess mated.

Then waved the sword, then blood was poured,
Oppression's host dismayed,
While the death-rent air and the cannon's glare
O'er Freedom's birth were playing;
And that green height with the evening light
Its crimson turf o'ershading,
Had holy grown as Freedom's throne,
Like her starry crown unfading.

Once more the skies with summer dyes
Above the field are bending,
And the waters still beneath the hill
Their crystal waves are bending;
But Peace divine around the shrine
Her boundless harvest wearing,
Bids us proclaim to deathless fame
Our fathers' matchless daring.

To-day a throng with festal song
The sacred mount o'erflowing,
Have gathered there with pomp and prayer,
All hearts with rapture glowing:
On the gory bed of the martyr'd dead,
In shade majestic sleeping,
Stands Freedom's pile in Glory's smile
Eternal vigil keeping.

Sweet are the charms of her I love.—BOOTH.
Sweet are the charms of her I love,
Charms not by out yard person given,
Charms which her orient mind maintains,
Blent with the purity of heaven.
Sweet are the charms of her I love,
Charms dwelling deep within her mind,
Charms which no poet's muse can know—
Such charms as are by truth refined.
Sweet are the charms of her I love,
Charms which gently, as if fairy,
Woo my spirit, and bind my soul
Sweetly to my love—
